

My name is Taj and i found out i was going to have a baby last year. i was terrified, not ready, confused, and pretty sure i wanted the babies mother to get an aboration. but, one day at school i was talking to a friend of mine who was also having a baby and he mentioned how he had a appointment at the womens option clinic and told me i should come down and talk to them about the baby. i went to his appointment not knowing what to expect and thought the people there would judge me, but was i surprised when i got there the staff that work there are very understanding and didnt judge me and they answered all my questions and told me they would like me to try them out. i did i was very pleased with them during the appointments i watch movies to get a better understanding about what it means to be a father and a best friend to my child. they thing that really changed my mind about getting an aboration was the first ultrasound i ever saw in my life let a lone of my own child. seeing that ultrasound was just amazing. i was overwumed with happyness and just so proud of what i have created and it just melted my heart to hear my babies heart beat. just being able to see your baby devlope over the period of time is just outstanding. i personaly believe if everyone that was going to have a baby would go and talk to the staff at the womens option clinic. there would be less aborations and maybe they would see how amazing a baby truely is and either keep their baby and give it the best life they can provide or give the baby up in adpotion. the womens option clinic is not just for women it helps the dads understand the true meaning of fatherhood and what it means to be a dad.

i would just like to thank all of the wonderful staff that work there. you guys helped me make the best choice of keeping my son. thank you all.

Your Friend,

Taj
